PUBLIC AND PRIVATE RELIEF IN 123 CITIES
OF 50,000 OR MORE POPULATION

February Expenditures

Expenditures for public and private relief in the reporting cities increased 8 percent in February, slightly more rapidly than in the preceding month but less rapidly than in the closing months of 1932. February expenditures in 1933 were 35.7 percent more than in 1932.

Source of Funds

Federal, State, and local public funds continued to finance an increasing proportion of the total relief expenditure reported by public and private agencies. Between February 1932 and February 1933 expenditures from public funds increased 87.6 percent, and expenditures from private funds decreased 47 percent.

In 63 of the 102 cities forwarding substantially complete reports (ae listed in table 4), public funds financed 95 percent or more of the total expended in February 1933. In only five cities was the proportion financed from public funds less than 75 percent.

Changes in Different Types of Relief

Work relief increased rapidly in February; for the first time in a number of months the amount expended was larger than in the corresponding month of the preceding year. General relief administered by public departments also increased noticeably.

After many months of slightly upward trend, mothers' aid dropped sharply in February, mainly because of the recent cut in appropriations for such relief in New York. Significant decreases were shown also in February grants administered by emergency-relief committees and other specially organized private agencies, certain phases of their former work having become part of the expanded program of public departments.

Families Aided and Average Relief per Case

The number of families aided through general relief, as reported by certain agencies, increaeed with about the same rapidity in February as in the preceding month, but lees rapidly than the increaee in amount expended. The result was an increaee in average relief per case to $21.31 per month in February as compared with $20.74 in January.

The number of cases aided through special allowances continued to increaee slightly. However, the reduction in appropriations for mothers' aid, noted above, brought a sharp decrease in the average grant per case for such relief.
